BABE RUTH LEAGUER'S JOURNEY ENDS ATOP A MOUNTAIN

The Alumni Association is proud to congratulate Ian Anderson, a graduate of the Clifton Park, New York, Babe Ruth League, on being selected the #3 overall by the Atlanta Braves at the Major League Draft.

Looking back at the 2013 Babe Ruth 14-Year-Old World Series...

Several hundred people were already in the stands around the baseball field at Larson Playfield, a complex where spectators can see the body of water with which the small city of Moses Lake, Washington, shares its name.

On the field, the Clifton Park Knights warmed up for their first game of the World Series. Many in that growing crowd three summers ago were not there to see the boys from New York. The hometown team had the tournament's next game, and its fans were taking advantage of a cool August evening to catch some extra baseball.

The scene made Clifton Park a bit nervous. So, too, did their opponent—Word had gotten to the Knights that their foe from Bryant, Arkansas, had won the prior year's 13-Year-Old World Series.

"Everyone told us we had no chance," said Bob Anderson, an assistant coach for the Knights.

The Knights offered up one of their twins to pitch the game. This teen had blossomed that summer, the spoils from the years he spent pitching to his brother in the backyard and chasing after the players on the varsity teams his father coaches. This kid had been great during the team's run to the World Series, but the Knights needed something special from him this game. And they got something more than special. He was transformational.

That day, that kid emerged as Ian Anderson who would terrorize Section II hitters and draw attention of Major League Baseball scouts. Having recently graduated from Shenendehowa High School, it was out in Moses Lake where Anderson first looked like the player expected to be a top-20 pick.

Anderson was perfect through the first four innings of that first World Series games. Anderson allowed a hit to start the fifth inning, then induced a double play. Before exiting prior to the seventh inning, he struck out eight and did not allow a run, facing the minimum 18 batters. The Knights won in stunning fashion, 10-1.

"He just did his thing," said Anderson's twin brother Ben, the pitcher's lifelong battery mate. "That's one of the most fun games I've ever caught."

The 2013 World Series preceded the three varsity seasons Anderson has played. During that time, the 6-foot-3, 175-pound right-handed pitcher struck out 172 batters in 121 1/3 innings while allowing 10 earned runs. In the summer between his junior and senior years, he won a world championship in Japan playing for the USA Baseball 18U national team.

Graduate Corner — Ian Anderson

Ian Anderson has enough accolades to fill the front of any business card he could hand any prospective client – Vanderbilt University Baseball commitment, USA 18U gold medal winner, a recent NYSPHSAA championship and the No. 3 draft pick by the Atlanta Braves.

Anderson will almost assuredly decline his scholarship to Vanderbilt University, and instead begin his professional career.

"It's exciting," Anderson said moments after hearing MLB Commissioner Rob Manfred call his name. "You never know going into the draft where you are going to go. I'm happy the way it played out."

Talk about Family Ties...

Two days after Ian Anderson was drafted, the Toronto Blue Jays selected his twin brother and teammate Ben in the 26th round. Ben catches for his brother and others, but is also a very effective pitcher who has committed to Binghamton University.

Being drafted by a MLB franchise as a high school senior is an outstanding accomplishment. Considering pitcher Ben Anderson turned his focus from catching to pitching less than two years ago, his selection by the Toronto Blue Jays in the 26th round of the MLB First-Year Player Draft makes it even more impressive.

"Definitely been something I've been looking to do my whole life," Ben Anderson said of being drafted. "It's definitely every baseball player's dream to get to be able to play professionally. It's still crazy to me.

From the Sandlot to the Big Leagues...

Ryan Blakney, Major League Umpire, started his career in 1992 as a batboy for his older brother's 15-year-old Wenatchee, Washington Babe Ruth League All-Star team that won State and Regionals gaining entry to the Babe Ruth 13-15 World Series.

In 1994 when Wenatchee added Cal Ripken Baseball to their charter, Ryan participated in the Rookie League and continued to play Cal Ripken and Babe Ruth Baseball.

When Ryan broke his arm at age 11 and was unable to finish the season, his mom Kay, current Assistant Regional Commissioner for the Pacific Northwest Region, asked him if he would like to umpire for the Rookie Division. When Ryan found out he would be paid $5 a game, he was hooked.

Ryan continued to umpire Cal Ripken and Babe Ruth Baseball, as well as High School and community College games. After graduating college, he went to the Jim Evans Umpire School in Florida in 2006, and was invited to go to the Professional Baseball Umpire Corp. After graduation, Ryan umpiring for many leagues, including the Arizona Rookie League, the Northwest League, the Midwest League, the Carolina League, the Texas League and the Pacific Coast League. In 2015, he was assigned a Major League umpire number and was made one of five rovers for the Pacific Coast League. A rover fills in for an injured or vacationing Major League umpire. As of 2016, Ryan has umpired over 100 Major League Games.

Bear, Delaware Babe Ruth League Alum Chad Kuhl Makes Big-League Debut for Bucs

Chad Kuhl just had to keep his cool. That was no small task on a scintillating summer evening on the banks of the Allegheny River, where PNC Park seemed the center of the baseball universe. In one of baseball's most picturesque settings, Kuhl ascended the pitcher's mound for the hometown Pirates in front of a national ESPN-TV audience and 32,228 discerning pairs of eyes.

As fate would have it, the former Bear, Delaware Babe Ruth Leaguer was making his Major League debut in a game where Clayton Kershaw happened to be hurling for the Dodgers. The three-time Cy Young Award winner arrived with an 11-1 record and 1.57 ERA. The mound has been his throne and Kershaw has wielded nearly invincible power.

Summoned from Triple-A Indianapolis, Kuhl could have been a bit player in Kershaw's latest turn. But there's nothing trivial about pitching in a big-league game, especially one's first, and the PNC Park gathering welcomed Kuhl enthusiastically. They would give the 23-year-old right hander some of their loudest cheers.

Chad Kuhl squeezed a lot of highlights into five innings of action during his MLB debut. He worked out of a bases-loaded jam in the first inning, inducing a force-out on a grounder from Dodgers slugger Yasiel Puig. He worked the count to the tune of eight pitches against three-time Cy Young winner Clayton Kershaw in the second inning, then saw his teammates rally for four runs against the Dodgers ace afterward.

But his best play might have been his very last of the day. In the fifth inning, he charged the plate after a wild pitch got past catcher Chris Stewart and made it there in time to get the throw back from Stewart and make a diving tag on Justin Turner to end the inning and preserve a 4-3 lead.

He punctuated the play with a fist pump (Turner had hit a two-run homer against two innings earlier) as he headed back to the dugout. He left the game with a 4-3 lead and would, ultimately, outpitch Kershaw while earning the victory by that very score – the Pirates bullpen kept L.A. scoreless the rest of the way, preserving the win for Kuhl.

The whole experience is something Kuhl won't soon forget. "You go up against him, and that's something you can dream about. My first debut was against Kershaw . " Kuhl told

"I thought it was fun to watch him out there," Pirates manager Clint Hurdle said. "Talk about a guy rolling up his sleeves and going to work. There was probably a lot going on inside, and I thought he channeled his emotions well." Hurdle wouldn't say how long Kuhl will remain in the Bucs rotation, but Kuhl's father saw a positive sign. "They gave him a suitcase," he said of the black bag with the Pirates' logo in front of Kuhl's locker.

Elk Grove Babe Ruth Concludes its 55th

In this age of tournament-teams, baseball showcases and parents shelling out thousands of dollars a year so their sons can play at a high level of youth baseball, there is a group of men, who for more than 15 years apiece, have faithfully organized and coached hundreds of boys aged 13 through 18 in the Elk Grove, California Babe Ruth League. As one of these men, Doug Penney, a local attorney and longtime board member of the organization said, "It's for the love of the game."

Penney, along with men such as Rick Venegas and Joe Matlen, still coach participants, years after their own sons have left the game. Some of the boys look like the next objects of attention by college, and perhaps, professional baseball scouts. Most boys, though, are just out there to play baseball for fun. But that's the purpose of this league: to give a place for any boy, no matter the ability level, a chance to play on a regulation-sized diamond. Penney says Elk Grove Babe Ruth Baseball has since its inception in 1962 modified the rules so that every player participates.

"We bat the entire lineup, all 11, 12, whatever we have, and there's a participation requirement that they must play three innings in the field every game," Penney said. That's one reason why Babe Ruth Baseball in Elk Grove has remained as popular as it has, that each boy knows he'll be on the field for all of the league's 22 regular season games and playoffs. Penney has coached a team in the league every spring since 2001. Matlen, who has been the League President for the last 15 years and has coached as well, announced he will be retiring.

"We feel it is a hidden gem in the baseball world with experienced coaches, competitive play, but still has the flavor of a large group of friends playing baseballs," said Matlen. "We highly value sportsmanship and ethics; as coaches we have found that we can be part of a friendly coaches fraternity and still enjoy competitive games."

Penney says he's coached a lot of quality young men for all the years and he sees the importance of getting his boys ready for high school baseball, but there's more:

"We never want to lose our flavor of being a recreational league," he said. "That's what we are here for. We are trying to teach these guys appreciation for baseball and a respect for baseball."

Buddy Ball Brings Baseball Players Together in Spencer

With a baseball bat firm in his grasp, Ryan Brooks stepped up to the plate after setting his feet, Brooks swung hard at the first pitch and missed high. With equal force, he swung at the second pitch and smacked it into right field, drawing a round of cheers from those on the field and in the stands.

He dropped the bat, locked his eyes on first base and took off. He rounded first, and eventually stopped at second. He smiled and it seemed the entire crowd at Spencer's 8th Street Park smiled with him.

Brooks drew cheers just a few moments later when he rounded third and sprinted for home. After scoring, he lifted his hands in celebration. "Way to go, Ryan," a person in the crowd shouted.

After one inning and a couple rain delays, Brooks was back up again. This time, he swung and missed a few pitches. When he made contact, the ball zipped toward second base. The crowd again cheered loudly.

Brooks was among the many baseball players, parents and coaches who gathered at the 8th Street Park for the Spencer, North Carolina Cal Ripken program's buddy ball league. It pairs mentally and physically challenged children and teens with those in Spencer Cal Ripken's other leagues. The North Rowan High School varsity baseball team has also helped out.

This was the first year that the Spencer Cal Ripken League first organized a buddy ball league. It's free, games usually last two or three innings and no one keeps score. The "buddies" help the challenged players with running from base to base and fielding the ball.

"Our goal is for these kids to have someone to play with and be a mentor and, in return, the other players can learn a little something from it," said Spencer Cal Ripken President Jeremy Bates.

Several of the of the players who participate in the current buddy ball league are part of programs put on by the Arc of Rowan, a United Way partner agency. Others simply found out about the league and decided to play. Arc of Rowan Executive Director Sheila Sapp said buddy ball has positively affected its participants. One important part of the buddy ball league, she said, is that parents are able to sit in the stands and watch their kids "like any child playing a sport." Some parents, however, decide to run the bases with their child.

North Rowan baseball coach Aaron Rimer's players talked about how grateful they were to participate in the buddy ball program. "It makes our day to come out here," Rimer said. "These kids just have a ball out here, they enjoy it so much and it's a great thing that's been put together. I don't think our kids truly grasp how important this is to these young men and women out here."

After crushing the baseball into the outfield during the first inning, Brooks said his favorite part the game is hitting the ball. From his expressions, Brooks also clearly enjoyed the interaction with other players, too.

When Brooks stepped up to the plate in the second inning, he looked at North Rowan junior Steven Thurston and smiled.

"Wooooo," Thurston exclaimed, and the pair both lifted their hands into the air. Seconds later, Brooks would nearly smack the ball into the outfield.

Brazoswood Baseball Vandalized

The Brazoswood, Texas Babe Ruth League was left stunned after vandals broken into their press box. Among the items burglarized was their PA system.

Their league has been chartered with Babe Ruth since 1982. They have hosted many state tournaments and are preparing for their 4th Southwest Regional Tournament beginning July 21.

Longtime Brazoswood volunteer, Alvin Bartek said, "The items that were stolen we cannot replace due to a lack of funding in our budget."

The popular field is a haven for young people. "We don't turn any kids away because we want to provide them with something positive," added Bartek. "This is all for the kids. You know, one of the kids saw the damage done and it was heartbreaking to see his reaction."

The Babe Ruth League Alumni was honored to provide some financial assistance to Brazoswood.

"We'll be back, we'll be ready.

We will make this happen for the regional tournament and will represent Brazoswood real good," said Bartek.
